WELCOME MESSAGE

Dear Delegates

It is with great pleasure and a profound sense of responsibility that we welcome you to the 25th SAAPAM Annual Conference. This quarter-century milestone is not merely a celebration of longevity; it is an opportunity to reflect critically on the state and future of public administration, public affairs, governance, leadership and development in South Africa and beyond.

Convened under the theme, “Growth and Sustainability through Improved Governance: Reimagining Institutions, Leadership and Development in a Changing World,” this conference comes at an important moment in South Africa’s democratic trajectory. With the country approaching the next local government elections, questions of institutional performance, ethical leadership, accountability, service delivery, public trust, local governance and sustainable development have assumed renewed significance. The conference therefore provides a timely intellectual and professional space in which these questions can be interrogated, debated and connected to practical realities.

At the heart of the SAAPAM conference is the recognition that the challenges confronting our society cannot be addressed by academics, practitioners, policymakers or political leaders working in isolation. The distance between knowledge and practice must continually be narrowed. This conference seeks to create that bridge by bringing together scholars, students, practitioners, public officials, political leaders, intellectuals and other stakeholders to engage in critical dialogue on the challenges and possibilities confronting the public sector and society.

The scale and diversity of this year’s conference demonstrate the continued relevance of this platform. More than 1,000 delegates, 675 presentations and 18 high-level panel discussions bring together a rich body of scholarship and practical experience. The programme further includes four book launches, a dedicated panel on women and leadership, engagements with Vice-Chancellors on the future of higher education, as well as contributions from Ministers and senior leaders from various sectors of government and society.

Importantly, the conference is not only about presenting research; it is about generating, testing and translating knowledge. A total of 172 papers have been submitted for consideration for publication across five journals, two books and the conference proceedings. The scholarly work has undergone a rigorous triple-blind peer-review process, with oral presentations at the conference serving as an important final stage in the scholarly interrogation and refinement of the research. This process reflects SAAPAM’s commitment to academic quality, intellectual integrity and the advancement of knowledge.

The strong participation of young scholars and students is particularly significant. Their presence ensures that the conference is not simply a reflection on the past, but also a conversation about the future. By creating space for emerging scholars to present their research, engage established academics and interact directly with practitioners and policymakers, SAAPAM contributes to the development of the next generation of public administration and public affairs scholars and professionals.

The conference also deliberately creates opportunities for engagement beyond conventional academic sessions. Through the Speed Network, delegates will have opportunities to interact directly with individuals who occupy positions of authority, influence and decision-making. Such engagements are important because they enable ideas to move beyond conference rooms and into institutions, while also creating opportunities for leaders and decision-makers to respond to questions, explain policy choices and account for decisions taken in the exercise of public office.

The high-level panels similarly provide a platform for robust and informed conversations about the direction of our institutions, the quality of leadership, the future of local government, higher education, public administration and the broader developmental agenda. These conversations are particularly important at a time when public institutions are expected to deliver more effectively, operate ethically, respond to changing societal expectations and contribute meaningfully to inclusive and sustainable development.

As we gather in Durban, therefore, this conference should be understood as more than an annual academic event. It is a knowledge-generating, knowledge-sharing and accountability platform. It is a space where scholarship encounters practice, where experience is interrogated through evidence, where policymakers engage with intellectual perspectives, and where students and emerging scholars find their voices within the broader public affairs community.

As SAAPAM celebrates its 25th Annual Conference, we are reminded that the strength of any professional and scholarly association lies not only in the number of years it has existed, but in its ability to remain relevant to the changing needs of society. This conference represents that commitment: to scholarship that matters, governance that works, leadership that is ethical and institutions that are capable of advancing development.

We therefore encourage every delegate to participate actively, question critically, listen openly and engage constructively. Let us use this conference to challenge established assumptions, interrogate prevailing practices, share evidence and imagine new possibilities for governance and development.

Welcome to Durban. Welcome to the 25th SAAPAM Annual Conference. Welcome to a platform where scholarship meets practice, ideas meet institutions, and dialogue contributes to shaping the future of public affairs.

We wish you a productive, intellectually stimulating and memorable conference.

Welcome, and let the conversations begin.
